Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1854 Excerpt: . On this principle we know that water will flow downwards from the summits of mountains, and not in the contrary direction;--that animal bodies are sustained by food, and destroyed by fire or poison. We know that the light to-day will be followed by the darkness of night, and that the night will be followed by another day. On this regularity depend all human plans of business. Who could navigate the ocean, if there were no regularity in polar attraction, or in the movements of the sun? Who could till the earth, if there were no uniformity in the seasons? Who could travel a journey, if he could have no foresight as to the length of the day? Who could provide for his family, if it were wholly uncertain whether the winter would last one week, or one year? In the laws of mind too, there is a uniformity similar to that which exists in the material world. Understanding, heart, conscience, and passions, are attributes of every human mind, which are affected essentially in the same manner by the same causes. If it were not so, civil government and social relations must cease. No laws could be framed for any community or any family. No reliance could be placed on any system of instruction, or argument, or persuasion. For who would undertake to instruct or move his fellow men, if there were no tendency in argument to convince, or in motive to excite? Amidst the...
