The cannot conceive the necessity of deferring to pass an immediate judgment on a cause which must be either just or unjust; little imagining that a preparatory study of many years is requisite to enable their counsel to form an opinion on the merits of their case. But although they deprecate this delay, they willingly acknowledge the superior wisdom and justice which directs the decisions of our courts; and break out in lavish commendations of the scrupulous regard which is shewn to the claims of the meanest individual. The distribution of justice in Persia is committed to the hands of the Sheikh Ool Islam (head priest), who is the judge of criminal and civil law; and to the governor, who is the Hakimi Oorf, or judge of common law. The former is directed in his decisions by the...
